Special Cable Despatch to Tun Bux and the Public Ledger.

Copyright, 1919, all rights reserved LONDON, Dec. 12 .- The marriage was quietly celebrated here on Wednesday of Earl Howe and Florence, Marchioness of Dufferin and Ava, daughter of John H. Davis, a New York banker. Efforts were made to keep news of the approaching marriage from all except the King and Queen and Queen Alexandra. Because of Lord Howe's official position royal permission for the marriage was necessary. This was obtained less than a week ago. There had been no formal announ ment of the engagement and a month age Lord Howe and Lady Dufferin decided that their wedding was to be of the quietest possible character. They have known each other many years, but in order to keep their secret during these last few weeks they have not even lunched in restaurants together. Some of their many friends guessed that their angasement was in the air, but they did not know that actual arrangements had

An Ideal Christmas Gift

His Novel on Abraham Lincoln

THE CRIMSON TIDE

An up-to-the-minute romance of New York

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS

THIS IS AN APPLETON BOOK

A MAN FOR THE AGES

By the Author of The Light in the Clearing

W HEN Abraham Lincoln closed his eyes for the last time, Secretary VV Stanton, who stood at his bedside, said, "He was a man for the agas." Lincoln to-day is the greatest and the livest figure in our history. Lincoln is alive with his own great and beneficent humanity in this tale and its many characters are real and convincing. A Man for the Ages is a fitting companion to Mr. Bacheller's powerful novel The Light in the Clearing. It must greatly move any man or boy who reads it.—N. Y. Globe.

There are reminders in new succession of the Lincoln drollness, uprightness, shrowdness and susceptibility to truth—both simple and great.— A Man for the Ages is a strong book because it does not try to be strong.—Brooklyn Eagle.
